The Services

The APEC Secretariat is seeking proposals for Assessing the Impact of Rising Sea Levels on Travel and Tourism in APEC Economies.

1. Background

The Tourism Working Group 2020-2024 Strategic Plan established “Sustainable Tourism and Economic Growth” as a priority area, with the objective to “maximize the travel and tourism sector’s contribution to employment, economic development, environmental protection and resilience, cultural and natural heritage preservation and inclusiveness to create economic and social benefits for business and communities in urban and rural areas.” The project aligns with the declaration of tourism ministers in 2018 to encourage member economies to create an enabling environment for SMEs in the tourism sector to engage in activities that will contribute to our efforts in achieving green and sustainable tourism. As APEC members seek to recover from the impact of COVID-19, the travel and tourism industry has been provided with the opportunity to promote a more sustainable and resilient industry. Policies targeted towards a sustainable travel and tourism recovery will aim to reduce the likelihood of future shocks and increase the industry’s resilience to the impacts of the climate crisis.

In coastal areas, sea level has a direct effect on flooding, shoreline erosion, and hazards from storms. Rising sea levels and extreme sea level events such as floods, surges, and tides threaten assets and infrastructure in urban settings along coastlines, including roads, bridges, subways, water supplies, and oil and gas wells that are necessary for local jobs and regional industries. The travel and tourism industry is a beneficiary and contributor to coastal conservation. Marine and coastal tourism are often important revenue sources for conservation efforts, and diverse marine life and beaches are significant attractors of tourism, as over half of worldwide tourism takes place in coastal areas. Rising sea levels creates stress on coastal ecosystems that provide recreation and attract tourism. Recognizing the intersection between rising sea levels and travel and tourism, it is imperative that economies identify destinations’ vulnerabilities to sea level rise and extreme sea level events.

This project will enable APEC economies to obtain, share, and strengthen knowledge related to the effects of rising sea levels on the travel and tourism industry, particularly the effects on travel and tourism SMEs. This project will seek to identify concrete tools and best practices for participants to mitigate their exposure to sea level rise and extreme sea events. Economies will be invited to participate to contribute and share data on sea level rise and how SMEs have mitigated their own exposure. The release of the report will coincide with a hybrid policy dialogue, which will present the findings of the report, highlight case studies of how individual destinations or SMEs have incorporated sea level rise considerations. The hybrid policy dialogue will offer economies the opportunity to share their own experiences and challenges related to sea level rise, and to engage other relevant stakeholders working in the climate and mitigation space. The report and survey collection will seek to identify areas of need and commonality among APEC economies, highlight skills used by SMEs to mitigate exposure, and provide policy approaches that can build resiliency.

2. Objectives of the project

This project aims to conduct a substantive research effort on the impact of rising sea levels across APEC economies and on tourism small and medium enterprises (SMEs) to identify common risks and exposures as well as identify best practices for the industry to mitigate risks.

Final Report:

- The Final Report will include a data assessment on the risk sea level rise and extreme sea events pose to APEC economies overall and tourism SMEs specifically. It will be based on the literature review, data assessment (surveys), and case studies as described below.
- This project will seek to identify concrete tools and best practices for participants to mitigate their exposure to sea level rise and extreme sea events. Economies will be invited to participate to contribute and share data on sea level rise and how SMEs have mitigated their own exposure. The report and survey collection will seek to identify areas of need and commonality among APEC economies, highlight skills used by SMEs to mitigate exposure, and provide policy approaches that can build resiliency.

Hybrid Policy Dialogue:

- The release of the report will coincide with a hybrid policy dialogue, which will present the findings of the report, highlight case studies of how individual destinations or SMEs have incorporated sea level rise considerations. The hybrid policy dialogue will offer economies the opportunity to share their own experiences and challenges related to sea level rise, and to engage other relevant stakeholders working in the climate and mitigation space.

3. Scope of Services

3.1 Description of Services

Literature Review

The contractor shall conduct a literature review of existing scientific reports and studies, and analysis of sea level rise and extreme weather events in APEC economies and their effects on travel and tourism infrastructure and SMEs. The literature review should include feedback from stakeholders across APEC member economies, including policymakers from tourism ministries or disaster planning organizations responsible for tourism planning or climate change mitigation, and private-sector decision makers involved in tourism development and SME assistance. The contractor shall also reach out to other relevant groups for input, which may include the Oceans and Fisheries Working Group (OFWG) and the Emergency Preparedness Working Group (EPWG).

The contractor will also work to compile and analyze existing data and indicators on sea level rise in APEC economies. Analysis should include how sea level rise and related weather events are expected to impact tourism economies, coastal infrastructure, urban and rural destinations and, if available, the effects on women and women-owned businesses in travel and tourism.

Data Assessment (Surveys)

The contractor shall develop a survey to send to TWG members to gain information on how sea level rise and related climate events are already affecting APEC region tourism economies, and challenges facing travel and tourism SMEs in responding to and preparing for future sea level rise and extreme weather events. Surveys will include qualitative and quantitative data questions to understand how economies are preparing for and responding to sea level rise and existing indicators and data they currently use. Surveys should also seek to identify gaps in availability of data. Surveys will include sex disaggregated indicators to identify specific needs and responses of women-owned SMEs. The surveys should also seek to identify and collect best practices, as available, for SMEs to mitigate their own risks, as well as for government policy makers and destination managers to incorporate resiliency into tourism planning and development.

Case Studies:

The contractor shall identify, in coordination with the project overseer, APEC economies to be highlighted as case studies. The case studies will require more in-depth research in that specific economy for how the tourism industry is exposed to sea level-related risks or how the government and/or tourism enterprises are mitigating those risks. The contractor will collect information from the case study economies in addition to the survey, which will involve follow-up virtual interviews and correspondence. Where data is available, case studies should include relevant projections of sea level rise, extreme weather events, and impacts to infrastructure, tourism, and/or destination management. The number of case studies is limited to 8 economies. In selecting the case studies, the project team will seek to include diverse experiences, economy size, and development level of the tourism economy to ensure a representative sample of APEC member economies. Priority for the case studies will be given to co-sponsoring economies as well as case studies that highlight the experience of women and women-owned SMEs.

Based on the results of the literature review, data assessment, and case studies, the contractor will consult with the project team to develop recommendations for policy makers to mitigate the impact of rising sea levels on tourism economies and tourism SMEs and to incorporate resiliency into tourism planning and development. The contractor will also provide a comprehensive list of best practices garnered from the undertaken work.

Final Report:

The contractor will use the aforementioned literature review, surveys and case studies to build a Final Report. The Final Report will be an assessment of no more than 40 pages based upon the research collected. The report will be an APEC publication. The Report will contain the following:

- a) cover page
- b) executive summary
- c) table of contents
- d) introduction
- e) literature review and data assessment on the risks that sea level rise and related weather events pose to APEC economies overall and tourism SMEs specifically
- f) case studies of up to eight economies (with a minimum of 5)
- g) recommendations for policy makers
- h) best practices for tourism SMEs

Policy Dialogue:

The contractor will present the findings of the report, including several of the case studies, in a hybrid policy dialogue hosted during APEC TWG meeting in 2023. The event will be in a hybrid format to include economies not able to travel to the event, and held to present the findings of the report and engage member economies in a discussion of the findings and policy recommendations. In this regard, the contractor and the project team will work together to create a presentation on the findings of the work, including visual representations of relevant data.

The contractor and the project team will reach out to academics, researchers, tourism policy makers and development experts, and tourism SMEs to discuss to participate in the event, ask questions, and offer comments. The event will consist of two panels, and each panel will include the following arrangement:

1. A 30-minute presentation of findings of the final report followed by a 45 minute panel with opportunities for questions

2. 1-hour 15-minute panel with speakers and experts, with an interactive discussion among a moderator, panelists, and the audience to encourage further discussion on the presentation topic, to allow for economies to engage with experts, and discuss best practices.

Overall, the contractor should also seek to include equitable representation of women in the conduct of the literature review, data assessment, case studies, , and development of recommendations for the TWG by forming a gender-inclusive team. In addition, engagement with both women and men should be sought during interviews with technical experts and economy representatives for case studies. The contractor should interview 40-50 percent female experts while conducting this analysis, subject to the economy recommendations for interviewees. Additionally, the contractor should seek to include 40-50 percent women panelists for the hybrid event.
